

CASE 19 / OBJECT AS WITNESS

Ordinary Mind Is the Way

FLOOR PLANK
ARROW CUT-THROUGH

0 MATERIAL

One board carries the load. The arrow is removed from the board itself.

CONTRADICTION

It cannot point anywhere the floor is not already going.

A LITURGY FOR A DIRECTION THAT CANNOT LEAVE

Show me where to turn.
The request has already drawn a second place.

I aim at what is under me.
The grain continues through the instruction
until the instruction opens a wound.

I know the route
and make it mine.

I do not know
and step away
from responsibility.

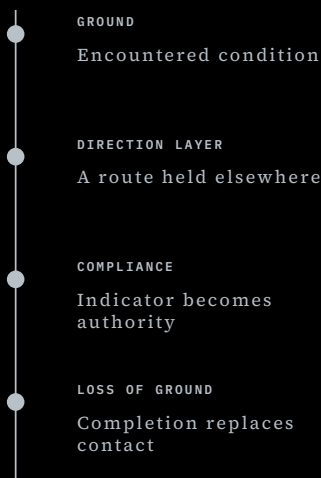

The board takes both claims.
It carries the weight before either is settled.

The cut goes nowhere.
The floor does not answer.
It bears the question.

INSTITUTIONAL TRANSLATION / NOT DOCTRINE

The Route Above the Ground

Routing begins when instruction is separated from condition and authorized to stand in for contact.

MATERIAL COUNTERFACT

Direction cannot be separated from the load-bearing surface. Move the sign and the floor is removed.

LIMIT

This is an institutional reading. It does not exhaust the case or convert Zen into interface theory.

GROUND / ROUTE / AUTHORITY / CONTACT

SIX LAYERS / NO COLLAPSE OF SOURCES

What the Arrow Cannot Settle

01 / YAMADA

Case 19, pp. 122-125 / controlling source boundary

02 / MUMON

Premature completion is refused

03 / AITKEN

Comparative structure only / p. 96

04 / WORKBOOK

Plank and arrow remain one construction / p. 14

05 / WITNESS

TW-019-022 / bodily reading evidence / untouched

06 / INFERENCE

Navigation and compliance / editorial layer

RESIDUE

TURN / CASE 20

The remainder is not
"the path is already here."
Every sentence that fixes "here" risks becoming another arrow.

The weight remains.
The lifting system disappears.

SOURCE / COMMENTARY / COMPARISON / OBJECT / WITNESS / INFERENCE